Ming-Ming, Fat Little Bear

Author: Jerry Pinto
Illustrator: Vishnu M Nair
Ming-Ming, fat little bear,
Woke up one day with a standing-up hair.

Now every bear has lots of hair
But a standing-up hair is very rare.
Ching-Ching, fat mother bear,
Looked at Ming-Ming’s standing-up hair.

“Ming-Ming, fat little bear,
What’s that hair doing up there?”
Ming-Ming, fat little bear,
Climbed on to a toppledy chair

To look into a mirror there.
“By golly and gosh, how does it dare!”
Ding-Ding, sisterly bear,
Took advantage of the hair.

Tried to plant a flower there
Ming-Ming said, “Don’t you dare!”
Bing-Bong, brotherly bear,
Poked about around the hair.

Pulled another up in the air.
“Hey Ming, you have a pair.”
Tring-Tring, telephone bear,
Wanted to plant an antenna there.

Ming-Ming, smart little bear,
Simply said, “Don’t you dare!”
Jing-Jang, disco bear,
Wanted to paint that single hair

Shiny here and sparkly there.
Ming-Ming said, “I like it bare.”
Ding-Dong, iron-man bear:
“Standing-up hair I swear!

How the people will stare.
Let’s shave your head in the public square.”
Ming-Ming fat little bear
Began to like his standing-up hair.

“Let it poke up here and there,
Hair should have a bit of flair!”
Now Bing-Bong Brotherly Bear
And Ding-Ding Sisterly Bear

Both want a standing-up hair.
They use some oil here and there.
Ming-Ming, fat little bear,
Went to bed in his cosy lair.

When he woke to the sun’s bright glare,
The standing-up hair? Just wasn’t there.
