

Rose and Rocky Go Green

Author: Annie Besant

Illustrator: Sandhya Prabhat

Rose came home from school with a new idea.

“Appa! I know how to make compost!”

“What is compost?”
asked Appa, scratching his head.

“Can I make it in the backyard, Appa?” Rose asked, tugging Rocky’s ear.

“But what is compost?” Appa asked, scratching his ear.

"It's what plants eat, Appa," said Rose. It makes them grow tall and strong."

"Baaaaa!" Even I knew that!" bleated Rocky.

Appa looked worried.

"Oh! Don't worry, Appa. We only need waste to make compost."

Off they ran to the backyard, and dug a hole.

“Do you know what we need for compost, Rocky?”

“We need lots of vegetable and fruit peels. See, we don’t have to waste anything anymore!”

An illustration on a light beige background. In the upper left, a man with a large black mustache and a yellow shirt sits on the ground, holding a large newspaper. A woman in a blue and red dress is crouched next to him, also looking at a newspaper. A small blue dog with a yellow bell is nearby. In the lower right, the same woman and dog are shown again, with the woman holding a newspaper over a pile of discarded papers and trash. A large tree with red leaves is on the right, and some green plants are in the bottom left. The text "We need lots of newspapers!" is written in the upper right area.

“We need lots of newspapers!”

“We need dry leaves!”

“And we need water!”

“Where did everything go?”
