

Serpy, the Snake

Author: Rajiv Tambe

Illustrator: Rijuta Ghate

In a thick, dark forest lived Serpy, the snake.

A snake does not have legs.

A snake cannot walk. It cannot run. A snake does not have wings.

A snake cannot fly. A snake cannot swim in a straight line.

But Serpy wanted to walk, run, fly and swim in a straight line.
That was all he could think of.

'If I had legs, I would walk in a straight line.
If I had wings, I would fly in a straight line.'

'But oh, I am so weird!
I can't walk straight, can't run straight!
I can't fly straight, can't swim straight.

I can only slither
zig zag, zig zag, zig zag.

Serpy saw some birds flying in the sky one day.
They were going up, going down, going around in circles and arcs. Not a single bird was flying straight.
This made Serpy think!

Looking across the plains one day, Serpy saw some fawns. The fawns ran here and there. They ran in the most zigzag way. Not a single fawn walked in a straight line.

This made Serpy think!

Serpy went towards the river.
The fish in the river wiggled and waggled as they swam.

This made Serpy think!

Serpy sat on the river bank, lost in thought. Just then a crab came by. Serpy moved aside. The crab walked past. But not in a straight line! The crab had half a dozen legs and yet could not walk straight!

This made Serpy think some more!

Serpy thought, did he really need wings? Did he really want those legs? Now zigzag, then criss-cross, is not the way he moved.

'I am fine the way I am. My slithering ways are always the same.
My zigzag ways are the same each day. And the rest of them are silly any which way!'

Do it yourself!

1. Draw five geometric shapes made out of straight lines.
2. Name five animals that move in funny ways.
3. Look around you. See if you can spot at least five living things that are made up of straight lines.
