

Wet or Dry

Author: Lovleen Misra

Separate the waste.
Yes, do try.

A bin for wet,
a bin for dry.

An illustration depicting a messy meal cleanup. On the left, a hand uses a blue spoon to scoop small, light-brown seeds from a yellow bowl with a decorative border. A blue fork and knife are crossed inside the bowl. To the right of the bowl, a fish skeleton lies on the table, with a purple fish head nearby. Further right, a banana peel is shown, along with a whole yellow banana and another banana peel. The background is a textured, light-colored surface.

Mushy, gooey—yes, all of that.

Even the poo
of your dog or cat!

An abstract artwork on a heavily textured, light-colored background. The composition includes several geometric shapes: a yellow square with a white interior, a green square, a brown rectangle, and a green circle. The shapes are rendered with soft, painterly edges, suggesting a hand-drawn or painted style. The overall effect is one of organic, layered forms.

A collection of various objects including a wooden box, a yellow comb, a green sock, a blue shoe, a small red object, a white envelope, a blue tube, and a brown box, all arranged on a textured, light-colored surface.

Separate the waste,
give it a try.

You know what is wet,
what is dry.

Learn to be smart with your trash.

Time to be careful,
not be rash.

Reuse, remove,
reduce your trash.
